GENERAL INTRODUCTION

The papers of modern British sovereigns have suffered as many vicissitudes as have other private collections. Almost all of William IV's papers, official as well as private, were probably destroyed by his executors,[1] and large quantities of George IV's either upon his death or nearly a century later.[2] So, too, was a large quantity of Edward VIII's.[3] Nor, in between, did Queen Victoria's papers survive entirely unscathed. The original manuscript of her diary, from the time of her accession to the throne, was destroyed by her youngest daughter, and the transcript the Princess had previously made both omitted substantial portions and amended others. The 111 manuscript volumes now extant apparently represent only about a third of the original.[4] Other important parts of the Queen's papers are also known to have been destroyed, including correspondence with Lord Granville. The destruction even extended to other collections outside the Royal Archives, so-called "very Private" letters to Disraeli being weeded out from the Hughenden Papers and subsequently destroyed.[5] Yet, overall, Queen Victoria's papers fared far better than those of her uncles or her son, amounting still, not merely to a formidable collection of private correspondence, but also to what one might almost describe, albeit with important qualifications, as a sort of National Archive in miniature.

Walter Bagehot, in a famous passage, thus summed up the powers of the mid-century monarch in Britain: "To state the matter shortly, the sovereign has, under a constitutional monarchy such as our own, three rights—the right to be consulted, the right to encourage, the right to warn."[6] When this was written, in the 1860s, Bagehot was stating an ideal rather than a fact; in practice Queen Victoria often claimed—and sometimes even exercised—more power than was indicated by constitutional niceties. In any event, her interest and activity accumulated a vast quantity of paper at Windsor. In addition to family letters and material relating to the affairs of the Royal Household, this included much correspondence with her ministers. The most important was, of course, that with her Prime Ministers, who not only had to consult her about ministerial and other appointments but also had to keep her regularly informed about governmental and political affairs in general so that she could properly perform her acknowledged constitutional role. Thus, in addition to the correspondence regarding the passing political questions of the day, there were also regular reports from her Prime Ministers both of the cabinet meetings and of proceedings in Parliament, and letters from other cabinet ministers regarding the affairs of their departments, from foreign monarchs and others regarding political as well as personal matters, and from a variety of other officials and private individuals. In many cases these were accompanied by drafts or copies of the Queen's replies and by important memoranda and other relevant papers.

Apart from ministerial and parliamentary crises, which were by nature fitful, the Queen's principal interest was in foreign affairs. The sovereign indeed expected to see all incoming Foreign Office despatches and to approve everything sent out in her name. But even before Victoria's accession in 1837, the bulk was already too large for the task to be done in good time, if indeed at all. Already, therefore, the Foreign Secretary had resorted to sending her only selected correspondence and instructions, the latter not infrequently after they had already been despatched abroad and on the assumption that they could, if necessary, be recalled or amended en route. The young Victoria, moreover, was unable to cope with all that was expected of the sovereign and relied on Foreign Secretary Palmerston only a little less than on Prime Minister Melbourne. A couple of months after her accession, she requested the Foreign Secretary not to send her any more foreign despatches until she had finished those she already had.[7] Shortly afterwards Palmerston directed that only "the most interesting" despatches should go to Windsor, an instruction amended at the Foreign Office to "interesting and romantic."[8] When, the following summer, her first Ascot arrived, he minuted for the Foreign Office: "The less you send the Queen this next week...the better."[9] But the Queen was by no means uninterested in foreign affairs, and already, though very tentatively, before the end of 1838 had complained to her Prime Minister that when he was not with her, she heard "nothing" about them.[10] After her marriage in February 1840 to a foreign prince with decided views about the role of constitutional monarchy in Britain and a major interest in foreign affairs (as well as with many relatives abroad), this naive inquisitiveness escalated rapidly into personal and political confrontation.

Prince Albert was the instrument by which his mentor Baron Stockmar hoped to see the British monarchy reformed and revitalized. "The Baron's idea of monarchy," wrote one of the Prince's biographers, "was that of a sovereign, wise and laborious, withdrawn from the sordid clash of party and exercising power which was unobtrusive but decisive."[11] After three months of marriage, however, Prince Albert still found that he was "only the husband, and not the master in the house."[12] For her part, Queen Victoria seemed as anxious as her ministers to exclude him from political business. "Albert helped me with the blotting paper when I signed," she wrote about transacting affairs of state a fortnight after her marriage.[13] During her first confinement, however, Albert received and made notes for her about all cabinet business and in consequence was, with the Prime Minister's concurrence, given in December 1840 the keys to the secret boxes containing confidential government documents. More than that, he was, by the time of the ministerial crisis the following year, taking an active part between the Queen and her ministers and to that end was allowed to be present at an official audience between the Queen and her prime minister.[14]

With Peel as prime minister from 1841 to 1846, Albert established for the monarch—and for himself—a reinvigorated role in political affairs. This mutual confidence also extended to the relations of the Queen and her Consort with her new Foreign Secretary, Aberdeen. When the Queen protested that despatches were being sent off before she approved them, she accepted his excuse that he was merely following precedent.[15] With Palmerston back at the Foreign Office, however, she and her Consort would not rest so contented. Eventually, on 12 August 1850, she addressed to the Prime Minister a decidedly blunt expression of her expectations:

> With reference to the conversation about Lord Palmerston which the Queen had with John Russell the other day, and Lord Palmerston's disavowal that he ever intended any disrespect to her by the various neglects of which she has had so long and so often to complain, she thinks it right, in order to prevent any mistake for the future, shortly to explain what it is she expects from her Foreign Secretary. She requires : (1) That he will distinctly state what he proposes in a given case, in order that the Queen may know as distinctly to what she has given her Royal sanction; (2) Having once given her sanction to a measure, that it be not arbitrarily altered or modified by the Minister; such an act she must consider as failing in sincerity towards the Crown, and justly to be visited by the exercise of her Constitutional right of dismissing that Minister. She expects to be kept informed of what passes between him and the Foreign Ministers before important decisions are taken, based upon that intercourse; to receive the Foreign Despatches in good time to make herself acquainted with their contents before they must be sent off. The Queen thinks it best that John Russell should show this letter to Lord Palmerston.[16]

Palmerston promised—tearfully even—to reform, and for a while things seem to have been better.[17] But within a few weeks the relations of the Court and Foreign Secretary were as bad as ever and their differences, which were, of course, political as well as personal and procedural, exploded again before the year was out. Eventually, in December 1851, the Prime Minister also decided he had had enough, and Palmerston was dismissed.

Palmerston was replaced by the courteous Lord Granville, whose disappointed rival complained of Queen Victoria and Prince Albert: "They labour under the curious mistake that the F.O. is their peculiar department and that they have a right to control, if not to direct, the foreign policy of England."[18] This was certainly an exaggeration, but there was no doubt that in the 1850s, the influence of the Crown in foreign affairs seemed to reach its climax. So widely was this believed, indeed, that when the Crimean War loomed up and in a confused disagreement over foreign and domestic affairs, Palmerston resigned the Home Secretaryship in Aberdeen's coalition government, Prince Albert was blamed by the radical press and even rumored to have been imprisoned in the Tower for treason. Palmerston, however, disavowed the accusation and returned to the government. Soon after, in February 1855, the war forced the Court to accept Palmerston as prime minister and subsequently even restored a degree of harmony in their relations. But the Prince kept a wary eye on the old rogue and at all times a jealous watch on the powers of the Sovereign. When, however, the Prince died in December 1861, Palmerston broke into tears and wrote in sadness of "that perfect Being."[19]

Greville recorded in his diary how smoothly the Court's supervision of government business was functioning just after the end of the Crimean War.[20] Indeed, records Prince Albert's biographer, "the curious eye of the Prince ranged over government departments, and he asked questions and urged action in a manner more reminiscent of a modern Prime Minister than of the Sovereign."[21] No detail escaped him, and he supplied information as generously as he demanded it. Like the Queen herself, he maintained a large confidential political correspondence with his connections abroad, and he also communicated regularly with his uncle in Brussels, his brother at Coburg, his cousin in Lisbon, the Queen's half brother in Leiningen, the King of Prussia, Prince William of Prussia, the King of Saxony, and Archduke John of Austria.[22] Much of this he personally selected, translated, and transcribed for circulation to the Prime Minister and certain members of his cabinet. Some of it, however, he regarded as too confidential even for them. His biographer acknowledges that he was not always discreet or even judicious in his writings, but in general concludes that "he elevated the business side of the monarchy to the dignity of a government department."[23]

Archival Content

The Prince's organization of the Royal Archives proceeded apace with the reinvigoration of the role of the constitutional monarchy. Within less than a year after their marriage, he had become the Queen's private secretary in all but name.[24] With the help of his own staff, he prepared papers for her inspection and approval, composed or corrected her draft replies, and made detailed memoranda of the conversations he or the Queen had with her ministers or other important visitors. He, or one of his assistants, also made copies of other important letters passing through Windsor, wrote numerous memoranda for themselves or members of the government, snipped out newspaper cuttings on matters of particular interest, and annotated some letters in red ink with the names of the writer and addressee. All this he arranged and had bound up in departmental or subject series, marked with careful cross-references and other notes and preceded by summaries written in his own hand.

Curiously there is no separate archive of Prince Albert's material. A good deal of his correspondence, in addition to what was always intended for it, has been incorporated in the archives of the Queen. But most of his personal correspondence has disappeared.[25] The results of his efforts upon Queen Victoria's archive at Windsor, up to 1861, can, however, best be described in the words of its official editors who, in the three fat volumes they published covering 1837–1861, could reproduce only a "minute fraction."[26]

> ...the collected papers form what is probably the most extraordinary series of State documents in the world. The papers which deal with the Queen's life up to the year 1861 have been bound in chronological order and comprise between five and six hundred volumes. They consist, in great part, of letters from Ministers detailing the proceedings of Parliament, and of various political memoranda dealing with home, foreign, and colonial policy; among these are a few drafts of Her Majesty's replies. There are volumes concerned with the affairs of almost every European country; with the history of India, the British Army, the Civil List, the Royal Estates, and all the complicated machinery of the Monarchy and the Constitution. There are letters from monarchs and royal personages, and there is further a whole series of volumes dealing with matters in which the Prince Consort took a special interest. Some of them are arranged chronologically, some by subjects. Among the most interesting volumes are those containing the letters written by Her Majesty to her uncle Leopold, King of the Belgians, and his replies. The collection of letters from and to Lord Melbourne forms another hardly less interesting series. In many places Queen Victoria caused extracts, copied from her own private Diaries, dealing with important political events or describing momentous interviews, to be inserted in the volumes, with the evident intention of illustrating and completing the record.[27]

For assistance with the Archive, Prince Albert had looked increasingly to his own staff, both English and German, but particularly to his two private secretaries, George Anson until his death in October 1849 and then Colonel (afterwards General) Charles Grey, and another member of the household, Colonel (afterwards Sir Charles) Phipps. After the Prince's death, Grey and Phipps continued to manage the Queen's correspondence, Grey himself becoming her acting private secretary and, at last, in 1867 even her nominal secretary. Then, after he died in 1870, she was served in that capacity first by General Sir Henry Ponsonby and, from 1895 until her death, by Arthur Bigge (afterwards Lord Stamfordham). With their assistance, the flow of information and opinion continued and was preserved for the record in the files that had been opened or reorganized by the Prince Consort. With the departure of the Prince, however, much else also disappeared. There was no longer the stream of memoranda (on foreign and military affairs in particular) and even the summaries ceased. Without his prodding, moreover, the quality of even the Prime Ministers' letters depended too much on the personality of the writer. Gladstone never established a close rapport with the Queen, and his reports of cabinet meetings therefore stuck to the rather bare record of the decisions, which were probably all she was really entitled to know. Disraeli, by contrast, wrote at considerable length of the discussions and divisions within the cabinet and of the follies and the foibles of his colleagues.

"Is there not just a risk," wrote Disraeli's Foreign Secretary, "of encouraging her in too large ideas of her personal power...?"[28] For his part, Disraeli, who laid on flattery with a trowel, believed he was using the Queen to his own purposes. "Lord Beaconsfield," he once wrote to her, "was pleased with the Chancellor of the Exchequer's tone & perceived that a 'Faery Queen' had waved her magic wand over him."[29] However, after Prince Albert's death, and still more perhaps after the consolidation of the two-party system in British politics, the power of the constitutional monarchy he had revived and developed inevitably declined. The Queen tried to adhere to the course she at least believed her husband would have followed and could intervene with vigor from time to time, as, for example, in the Schleswig-Holstein question in 1864 as well as in the eastern crisis of 1876–78. But these were unsystematic essays rather than a pervasive and persistent influence. In her grief, the widowed queen had also declared she could no longer cope and professed a lack of interest, but within a couple of years she was insisting again on seeing draft despatches beforehand and shortly after that rejecting the notion that they could satisfactorily be modified by telegraph.[30] In her later years, some of these documents may have been marked "Drafts" when they were really copies of what had already proceeded on their way.[31] But the forms were preserved throughout and so they continued to ensure the flow of paper she and her consort had all along demanded.

To the King of Prussia, Prince Albert once wrote: "...we are gradually amassing a treasure of political knowledge, which grows daily more valuable to us, and which we hope one day to hand down to the Prince of Wales, your dear god-son, as the best endowment for his future kingly office."[32] After Albert's death, this work was continued by his librarian, who was also a German and might have been expected to proceed no less systematically. Unfortunately he did not do his job so well; perhaps it was he who, in making a detailed list of the contents of each volume, decided to omit the date of every single item! The result was that towards the end of Queen Victoria's reign, a large quantity of papers was found to be stacked away unsorted, and in the subsequent process of selection and arrangement about half was destroyed.[33] The remainder, however, has since been incorporated into the system invented by the Prince, though this required breaking up the volumes in which the material had formerly been bound.[34]

Organization of Material

Each file in the Victorian Archive is arranged in chronological order under a series title or name by type of correspondence or subject, that series being given a distinguishing letter or letters of the alphabet. But the arrangement is rather loose, and subjects tend to overlap under the same letter or to be extended or scattered over several. The series "A" consists mainly of the general correspondence with the Queen's Prime Ministers, and "B" of that with other Cabinet ministers, though correspondence with Disraeli as prime minister is to be found in both. Other such correspondence, moreover, is filed under separate subject series, such as, in particular, "C," which consists chiefly of material on the formation of particular administrations and on other so-called ministerial crises. Foreign affairs, arranged largely by country, occupy five letters of the alphabet (G, H, I, J, and Q), with minor items occasionally straying into others, such as Prince Albert's abstracts in German (Y. 156–158) of Foreign Office papers he had not felt it necessary to copy into the main files.

Each individual file in the series in turn has a number, and each item in it a sub-number, circled where necessary in order to be distinguished from what presumably were the folio numbers of the earlier bound volumes. Each file contains a typed list of the material that follows, giving the names of the author and recipient as well as the assigned number of each item and, during Prince Albert's years, usually but not always, an overall summary and background survey of the topic or topics covered in each file. As has already been mentioned, these lists do not give precise dates of the individual items, but that deficiency has been remedied and an index of names also is provided in the publisher's guide. The systematic translations into English that are found for many of the earlier documents in French were apparently made some time during the twentieth century and are not part of the original archive.

With the gracious permission of Her Majesty the Queen and the kind assistance of the librarian and staff of the Royal Archives at Windsor Castle, UPA has already published the subject series on "The Oriental Question"[35] (G. 1–57 and H. 1–40). The publishers now add the subject series on Russia and Eastern Europe, 1846–1900 (H. 41–52) in Papers of Queen Victoria on Foreign Affairs, Part 1; Germany and Central Europe, 1841–1900 (I. 1–68, I. 70–71, I. 87–100, I. 102–103, and J. 103–106), The Papers of Queen Victoria on Foreign Affairs, Part 2; Italy, 1847–1900 (J. 1–42 and C. 51–52), The Papers of Queen Victoria on Foreign Affairs, Part 3; Portugal and Spain, 1841–1900 (J. 43–66), The Papers of Queen Victoria on Foreign Affairs, Part 4; France and Belgium, 1848–1900 (J. 67–83, J. 85–91, J. 107, and Q. 1–8), The Papers of Queen Victoria on Foreign Affairs, Part 5; and Greece, 1847–1863 (J. 93–100), The Papers of Queen Victoria on Foreign Affairs, Part 6. Some files consisting entirely of copies of state papers better found in the Public Record Office and of more personal papers and correspondence of the Prince Consort on German affairs have been entirely omitted. But UPA hopes soon to complete the series on foreign affairs with further files on extra-European countries and areas and, in due course, to add series on colonial and domestic affairs.

Although necessarily selected from the vast and varied Victorian Archives, each of these files is in itself complete and unedited, and they are here reproduced for the first time for the benefit of a wider audience of historians and others—not the least, doctoral candidates—than it has hitherto been possible to accommodate at the Royal Archives. For all this, including the material relating to the period after 1861 as well as before, posterity owes an enormous debt to Prince Albert, whatever view is taken of his constitutional theories and the influence they had upon the Victorian monarchy.

REEL INDEX

The following index lists the various items of correspondence found in the indentified volumes of The Papers of Queen Victoria on Foreign Affairs, Part 5: France and Belgium, 1848–1900. All correspondence is in the form of a letter or despatch unless otherwise noted. Each item identifies the sender and recipient of the correspondence, the date(s), and the number of frames (frs.). The four-digit number on the far left is the frame number, which is followed by the document number(s) of the volume where the material is located. Because some of the documents filmed are small, more than one document may be on one frame of the film. The user will note in these instances that either the frame number is repeated or the documents are each listed with a total frame count after the final document in the group.

CORRESPONDENT INDEX

The following is an alphabetical list of the correspondents found in Papers of Queen Victoria on Foreign Affairs, Part 5: France and Belgium, 1848–1900. While distinction of a person's correct title at the time of the correspondence is made in the Reel Index, no such attempt is made in the Correspondent Index. An individual's full surname relevant to the latest item of correspondence on the microfilm is used, when discernable, and is spelled out in full at the main entry but foreshortened to the title in all subentries. Hence, for example, the full main entry of Temple, Henry John, 3rd Viscount Palmerston, but Palmerston, Lord in all subentries. Titles are ignored when alphabetizing inverted names; hence Malet, Sir Alexander is placed before Malet, E.

The arabic number preceding the colon refers to the reel, while the four-digit number after the colon refers to the frame number at which the user will find the referenced correspondence.
