The presidency of Lyndon B. Johnson represents a significant period in the history of U.S. foreign policy. The Vietnam War was the dominant event of this period, to be sure, but it is highly misleading to think of the Johnson years in terms of Vietnam alone. The 1960s marked the height of post–World War II U.S. globalism, and Johnson inherited from his predecessors worldwide obligations and a host of complex problems. In addition to Vietnam, he faced major crises in Panama, the Dominican Republic, and the Middle East.

Although the cold war shaped U.S. responses to these crises and continued to influence U.S. foreign policy in general, important new developments in foreign policy occurred under Johnson. Responding to changes in the international system, the administration began to devise new approaches toward the Soviet Union and the People’s Republic of China, the major adversaries of the United States. As tensions with these adversaries eased, ties within the Western alliance system loosened, causing strains between the United States and its major European allies. The economic burdens imposed by the Vietnam War and by two decades of cold war policies also forced the administration to depart from conventional approaches to the old issues of foreign aid and economic development in the Third World. The Johnson years thus represented a transition between the global “cold warriorism” of the early Kennedy presidency and the policy of détente and retrenchment initiated by Richard Nixon and Henry Kissinger.

The management of these crises and the groping toward new policies can be studied in depth in the “Country Files” section of Johnson’s National Security Files. The “Country Files” were maintained in the White House by McGeorge Bundy and Walt Rostow, national security advisors to Johnson. Bundy and Rostow monitored the daily cable traffic through the White House Situation Room and coordinated the flow of intelligence and information to the president, determining what items should be brought to his attention. They served as liaisons with the departments and agencies involved in foreign policy, reviewing recommendations sent to the president by these groups and keeping an eye on their daily operations to ensure that policies were coordinated and decisions implemented.

Bundy and Rostow, however, were more than neutral disseminators of information; they each met daily with the president and often pushed their own recommendations. In 1965, Bundy went to Vietnam and the Dominican Republic to serve as Johnson’s eyes and ears during the crises in those areas. Rostow prepared the agenda for and informed agencies of the results of Johnson’s famous “Tuesday lunches,” the administration’s primary decision-making vehicle; in addition, he represented the White House in the administration’s Senior Interdepartmental Group, a top-level coordinating committee. Both Bundy and Rostow also publicly defended and explained administration policies by holding press conferences and giving “backgrounder” briefings to journalists.

The “Country Files” represent some of the most important foreign policy files maintained in the offices of Bundy and Rostow. As the title suggests, they consist of separate files, arranged chronologically, for various individual countries. They contain extensive cable traffic between the departments and agencies in Washington and embassies and missions abroad; memoranda of conversations between U.S. and foreign officials and among top U.S. officials; intelligence reports assessing critical foreign policy issues; internal memoranda, such as those from the national security advisers to the president; and agendas and records of top-level meetings. The “Country Files” provide a clear sense of the way in which the administration perceived major foreign policy issues and framed its responses. Their chronological arrangement permits the researcher to follow on a day-to-day basis the administration’s handling of crises and to trace the evolution of major policies.

Vietnam was Johnson’s major problem—and eventually his undoing. The Vietnam “Country File” (Vietnam: National Security Files, November 1963–June 1965) richly documents the administration’s escalation of the war from a commitment of sixteen thousand advisers in November 1963 to that of nearly two hundred thousand combat troops by the end of 1965. This file, which contains material through August 1965, details such controversial issues as the Gulf of Tonkin incident, the initiation of regular bombing attacks on North Vietnam, and the July 1965 decision to commit large numbers of combat troops to South Vietnam. From the documents in the file, one can clearly sense the growing fears of collapse in South Vietnam, the sometimes acute divisions among Johnson’s advisers on how to respond to the crisis, and the president’s own caution.

The documents offer an in-depth look at the June–July 1965 deliberations that led to the commitment of combat troops to Vietnam. Included are extensive memoranda from critics of escalation such as Undersecretary of State George W. Ball and advocates such as Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara, plus a number of key reports, among them a lengthy study prepared for the Joint Chiefs of Staff that forecasts the possible military results of escalation. Records of top-level meetings show how the president painstakingly, and with consummate skill, forged the consensus on which escalation was based.

From the outset, the conflict in Vietnam spilled over into neighboring Laos and Cambodia, and the “Country Files” on these nations elucidate the broader, Indo-Chinese dimensions of the war. The Laos file contains material through January 1966. Ostensibly, the United States persisted in trying to uphold the tenuous 1962 Geneva Agreements on Laos. In fact, in response to growing North Vietnamese use of Laos as an infiltration route for men and supplies into South Vietnam, the United States mounted various military and paramilitary actions along and across the Laotian border. In Cambodia, the mercurial Prince Norodom Sihanouk struggled to maintain his nation’s tenuous neutrality; to that end he severed relations with the United States in late 1963. The Cambodia file, which contains material through December 1965, documents Sihanouk’s desperate maneuvers and the U.S. response to them.

The Vietnam War was also the dominant factor influencing relations between the United States and major Pacific allies, Australia, Thailand, and the Philippines. The material on Australia is restricted mainly to the period before December 1965. Although it deals with a number of issues, including trade and the U.S. balance-of-payments problem, it primarily concerns the Johnson administration’s efforts to get Australian troops to fight in Vietnam. The Thailand file, which contains material through December 1965, covers such topics as U.S. assistance to the Thai government in combating an internal insurgency and the establishment of U.S. bases in Thailand from which to stage air strikes in Vietnam and Laos. The Philippines file is more complete, containing material up to late 1968, and also more comprehensive. In addition to offering insights on Vietnam, this file reveals much about the special relationship between the United States and the Philippines and the trade agreements and U.S. base rights that were an integral part of it. This file also provides information on the emergence of Ferdinand Marcos as president of, and ultimately strongman in, the Philippines.

The Indonesia file is one of the largest, most interesting, and most significant files in the “Asia and the Pacific” grouping. Strategically located and rich in natural resources, Indonesia was a major prize in the cold war during the 1950s and 1960s, and its volatile leader, Achmed Sukarno, maintained a delicate neutrality and extorted maximum aid from each superpower. During the same time that the United States was escalating the war in Vietnam, a major crisis developed in Indonesia. Sukarno veered sharply toward the left and admitted Communists to his government while simultaneously threatening the nearby pro-Western government of Malaysia. In a dramatic turn-around, the Indonesian army in October 1965 narrowly thwarted a Communist coup attempt, expelled the Communists from the government, and overthrew Sukarno. The Indonesia file reveals America’s anxiety and its subsequent relief at what Johnson would later call “a major event in the history of modern Asia.”

The Johnson administration also faced major crises in Panama in 1964, the Dominican Republic in 1965, and the Middle East in June 1967, when the long-standing tensions between the Arabs and Israelis exploded into the so-called Six-Day War. “Country File” documentation on the above two Latin American crises is quite sparse.2 Because the Israel and United Arab Republic files contain material from before June 1967, they deal only with the origins of the Six-Day War.3 There is, however, important material on the war in the Middle East, General, “Country File,” and in the U.S.S.R. and Eastern Europe, 1963–1969 file.

The cold war persisted during the Johnson years, but it underwent significant modification. The international political system had changed dramatically from the bipolar structure of the period immediately following World War II to one with multiple centers of power. The emergence of the Sino-Soviet split provided new opportunities and posed new challenges for U.S. policy. Following precedents set by John F. Kennedy during his last months in office, Johnson deliberately set out to ease tensions with the Soviet Union. He cooled U.S. rhetoric, worked out a U.S.-Soviet consular agreement, and expanded U.S.-Soviet cultural exchanges. He also took the first halting steps toward controlling the nuclear arms race, negotiating a nuclear nonproliferation treaty with the Soviets and initiating strategic-arms-limitation talks. Progress in this latter area was halted by the Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia, but Johnson could rightly claim credit for easing cold war tensions. Very little material on these important events, however, is included in the U.S.S.R. and Eastern Europe, 1963–1969 file.

This is not the case with the other major U.S. adversary, China. The “Country File” on China is one of the largest of the entire collection, and the range of material included suggests the complexity of the China issue in the 1960s. The United States still recognized Chiang Kai-shek’s regime on Taiwan as the government of China, and there is abundant material on the increasingly delicate relationship between the two countries. The file also includes the extensive cable traffic to and from America’s “listening post” in the British colony of Hong Kong. Because the United States did not maintain diplomatic relations with the People’s Republic of China, this file lacks the usual kind of diplomatic documents found in the other “Country Files.” It does, however, contain numerous intelligence reports concerning mainland China, many of them assessing China’s military capabilities and expansionist inclinations, especially in light of the Cultural Revolution that swept the nation in 1966 and 1967. Internal memoranda in the file also suggest the beginnings of an almost imperceptible shift away from a long-standing and deeply entrenched China policy. The People’s Republic was still regarded as the number one enemy of the United States, but some U.S. officials increasingly viewed the isolation and containment of mainland China as outdated and untenable, and began to advocate edging cautiously away from Chiang and possibly developing contacts with Mao Tse-tung’s Communist regime.

Changes in relations with old adversaries were paralleled by growing strains in relations with old allies. As fear of the Soviet Union diminished in the 1960s, the ties that bound the Western alliance loosened. The major European allies opposed U.S. escalation of the war in Vietnam, and the economic strains imposed by the war and a growing balance-of-payments problem caused demands in Congress to remove large numbers of U.S. troops from Europe. Economic crisis in West Germany and the United Kingdom added to the turmoil. The most dramatic sign of trouble in the alliance came in February 1966 when the imperial President Charles de Gaulle withdrew France from military participation in NATO. The various “Country Files” on Western Europe document the tensions in the Western alliance; the files for France and the United Kingdom are especially informative, although the latter contain material only through the middle of 1967.

Conflict between the industrialized nations and the Third World also assumed growing importance in the Johnson Years, with U.S. policies toward the Third World showing signs of changes. The Kennedy administration had courted the new nations of Asia and Africa with promises of lavish aid. Preoccupied with Vietnam and overextended economically, the Johnson administration increasingly stressed regional solutions to economic problems in the Southern Hemisphere in lieu of unilateral U.S. involvement there, and self-help and private investment in lieu of sizable U.S. foreign aid commitments. These trends are evident in the generally fragmentary “Country Files” on the numerous African nations. They are even more evident in the relatively complete file on India, which is one of the largest of the “Country Files.” Johnson continually stressed that India should do more to help solve its own agricultural problems, and he withheld long-term commitments of grain, even in a time of severe food shortages, to secure this end.

The Southern Hemisphere issues that most concerned the United States related to Latin America. Johnson and his advisers appear not to have been obsessed with Cuba, as the Kennedy administration had been, but they were concerned with Fidel Castro’s potential for mischief in the hemisphere. The Cuba file contains extensive intelligence reports on internal developments in Cuba and also information about the activities of Cuban exiles in the United States.

Kennedy and his advisers had sought to promote democracy in Latin America as a means of staving off communism. During the Johnson years, the United States became increasingly tolerant of military coups, preferring the stability of right-wing governments to the uncertainty and possible danger of democratic ferment. This is quite evident in the case of Brazil, as documented in its large and significant “Country File”; there the United States played an indirect, but a highly significant, role in the 1964 overthrow, by a military clique, of the constitutional government headed by President João Goulart. The various “Country Files” on Latin American nations also make clear the demise of the Alliance for Progress, the shift toward private capital in economic development, and the steady decline of U.S. prestige in the hemisphere from the heady days of the early 1960s.

The “Country Files” cover many other important subjects. Concern with South Africa’s policy of apartheid is quite evident from material contained in the South Africa file. U.S. policy toward and support of the United Nations, which underwent significant changes during the 1960s, is thoroughly covered in the United Nations file. This file also contains important material on the Vietnam War and U.S. intervention in the Dominican Republic, and abundant documentation on the delicate issue of Chinese representation in the UN.

The National Security files: “Country Files,” 1963–1969, thus provide an indispensable documentary record of a critical period in U.S. foreign relations. The world changed dramatically during the 1960s, and the Vietnam War, the Sino-Soviet split, and the growth of “polycentrism” brought corresponding, if sometimes belated, changes in U.S. foreign policy. This documentary record is far from complete, and important gaps remain, especially in the last two years of Johnson’s presidency. Nevertheless, the enormous volume and diverse nature of the documents contained in these files represent an essential foundation for understanding U.S. foreign policy during this transitional period.

INTRODUCTION

THE LYNDON B. JOHNSON NATIONAL SECURITY FILES: LATIN AMERICA, 1963–1969, FIRST SUPPLEMENT

In Latin America, as elsewhere, U.S. foreign policy was crisis-oriented in the period between 1963 and 1969. Concern over the region continued to mount with the exportation of Cuban communism throughout Latin America. This period saw U.S. interventions in the Dominican Republic and Panama, and vacillation in U.S. Latin American policy, particularly in regard to policies aimed at nonintervention and alliance-building. The inter-American enthusiasm spurred by John F. Kennedy’s Alliance for Progress waned and the Johnson administration had to try to maintain the United States’ position in the region despite Latin American disillusionment and growing U.S. congressional reluctance to support foreign aid.

This first supplement to President Johnson’s National Security Files Country Files for Latin America contain much documentation on these and other countries and crises. Approximately 13,000 pages of recently declassified materials document the state of affairs in Cuba, the Panama and Dominican Republic crises, and formulation and implementation of the “Mann Doctrine” and the anti-Communist crusade. Documentation on a variety of emerging and evolving countries, including British Guiana, Peru, Brazil, Chile, Mexico, highlight the state of U.S. relations in Latin America, U.S. foreign aid and loans, border disputes, Communist and student demonstrations, and U.S. responses to various governmental crises and coup d’etats. In addition, it contains important material on the Alliance for Progress, information on U.S. economic and military assistance programs in various Latin American countries and on the proposal for a Latin American nuclear free zone. In all, the collection’s thirteen reels give a good sense of the important role of Latin America in U.S. foreign policy in the 1960s.

Selected countries with a large quantity of documents, in this supplement, are briefly described below.

Throughout the 1960s, U.S. policymakers remained obsessed with Cuba. The Cuban revolution and Castro’s subsequent efforts to spread leftist revolutions in Latin America aroused profound fears in the United States. Tensions between the two nations remained high during the Johnson years. When the United States seized Cuban fishing boats off the Florida coast, Castro retaliated by cutting off the water supply to the U.S. naval base at Guantanamo Bay in Cuba. The Johnson administration worked vigorously to isolate Cuba diplomatically and economically. It failed to persuade its European allies to cut off trade with Cuba, which caused much tension in the Western alliance. Perhaps surprisingly, it did better within the Southern Hemisphere. Some Latin American nations were as concerned with Cuban subversion as the United States, and as a result, in July 1964 the Organization of American States (OAS) imposed sanctions on Cuba. All but four Latin American nations subsequently broke relations and suspended trade with Cuba. Even before the sanctions were imposed, Cuban influence seemed on the wane, and the death of Ernesto “Che” Guevara in Bolivia in 1967 signaled the end of Castroite subversion in Latin America.

This supplement features approximately 3800 pages on Cuba, which include documentation on Fidel Castro and his beliefs; activities of “Che” Guevara and the export of Communist revolution; reports and analyses on the activities of Latin American Communist and Cuban exiles; intelligence reports on Cuban exile activities and Castroites in a variety of countries; arms trafficking; adjudication of American claims; domestic economy and inflation issues; and repatriation of Americans via Mexico.

Early in his presidency, LBJ confronted major crises in Panama and in the Dominican Republic. Panama had long resented the privileged position conferred on the United States by the original canal treaty, and, in turn came to resent both the second-class citizenry imposed on its people in the Canal Zone and its small share of the earnings received from operating the canal. When U.S. students refused to fly the flag of Panama at a Canal Zone high school in January 1964, large numbers of Panamanians demonstrated in protest. The demonstrations turned to rioting and then to street warfare. Twenty-four Panamanians and three U.S. soldiers were killed, and $2 million in property was destroyed. Panama accused the United States of “unjustified aggression” and broke relations. The crisis produced a significant turnabout in U.S.-Panamanian relations. After three months of sporadic discussions, the two nations agreed to resume diplomatic relations and to search for ways to resolve their differences, a move facilitated by only slightly veiled U.S. threats to explore alternative routes for the construction of a new canal. After his re-election in November 1964, Johnson indicated that he was willing to negotiate a new treaty that would recognize Panama’s sovereignty over the Canal Zone. In mid-1967, the two nations announced the drafting of three treaties dealing with the defense and operation of the existing canal and the construction and status of a new canal. In addition to recognizing Panama’s sovereignty over the Canal Zone, the treaties gave Panama a voice in the operation of the canal and assigned to it a larger share of the canal’s revenues. Further progress was forestalled by a prolonged period of tumult in Panamanian politics, but Johnson’s effective diplomacy removed an old source of friction and established the basis for a new order in U.S.-Panamanian relations.

In contrast, U.S. military intervention in the Dominican Republic resurrected the old specter of the “colossus of the North.” Following the assassination of dictator Rafael Trujillo in 1961, a liberal government headed by Juan Bosch took power. Bosch subsequently was overthrown in a military coup in 1963, but two years later his followers mounted an uprising against the government and Johnson responded decisively. Johnson was persuaded that Communists were poised to exploit the chaos in the Dominican Republic and was determined to avoid another Cuba in the hemisphere. He also was intent on maintaining his administration’s credibility throughout the world. Thus in April 1965, he sent twenty-two thousand U.S. troops to the Dominican Republic, ostensibly to protect
U.S. lives and property, in fact to prevent a Communist takeover. The United States imposed order in the occupied nation, established a provisional government, and in June 1966 supervised the holding of elections. The last U.S. troops were withdrawn in September.

The Dominican intervention had grave consequences for the administration for it provoked LBJ's first credibility crisis. Journalists and congressmen were not persuaded that the Communists posed a threat sufficient to justify military intervention, and subsequent administration efforts to prove its case were not convincing. Particularly damaging was the opposition of Senate Foreign Relations Committee Chairman J. William Fulbright. The Dominican intervention also did the United States great damage in Latin America. The president acted first and consulted the OAS later, reawakening old fears of the gunboat diplomacy of an earlier era and undoing much of the goodwill generated by the Alliance for Progress.

Documentation for the Panamanian and Dominican crises consist of approximately 3400 pages and include intelligence reports on Communist and Castroite activities; National Military Command Center situation reports on U.S. military operations; analyses of political persons, governmental changes, political campaigns, and political parties; Organization of American States activities; and Canal treaty negotiations.

U.S.–Chilean relations were particularly stable during the Johnson presidency. The administration's policy and cooperation with Eduardo Frei's government were the most constructive accomplishments of its Latin American programs. A primary reason for U.S. cooperation in Chile was the alternative to Eduardo Frei, leftist Salvador Allende and his Communist-Socialist front. Increasing U.S. economic and military aid insured Frei's election victory in 1964. U.S. support served as the catalyst for Frei's attempts at land reform, nationalization of the copper industry (of course, the American companies were adequately compensated), and the raising of the standard of living.

Although the administration remained obsessed with the specter of communism in Latin America, the trend was toward right-wing dictatorships in the mid 1960s. In Brazil, the United States welcomed and at least indirectly encouraged the 1964 overthrow of Joao Goulart's left-leaning constitutional government, and recognized the new military regime with embarrassing speed. When other Latin American nations followed the Brazilian example, however, the United States was less pleased. The Johnson administration tried at least halfheartedly to block a military coup in Argentina and recognized the new government only when it seemed likely to survive regardless of what Washington did. In Peru, a 1968 military coup overthrew a democratic government friendly to the United States and nationalized a major oil company owned by Standard Oil.
ORGANIZATION OF THE COLLECTION

The documents in this microfilm publication are from the Papers of Lyndon B. Johnson, National Security Files: “Country Files.” These documents represent a portion of the holdings of the Lyndon B. Johnson Library in Austin, Texas.

The National Security Files (NSF) were the working files of Lyndon B. Johnson's special assistants for national security affairs, McGeorge Bundy and Walt W. Rostow. Documents in these files originated in the offices of Bundy and Rostow and their staffs; in the various executive departments and agencies, especially those having to do with foreign affairs and national defense; and in diplomatic and military posts around the world.

The NSF “Country Files” are arranged by geographic area and thereunder alphabetically by country. Memos, cables, intelligence reports, correspondence, and special studies were originally bound into folders arranged in chronological order within each country. Each folder was assigned a volume number. Cables were usually arranged under agency tabs and embassy tabs. The State Department, Defense Department, FBI, CIA, and U.S. Information Agency were the agencies most frequently represented. Memos, memcons (memoranda of conversations), correspondence, and reports were filed with tabs highlighting selected documents, events, and correspondents. The files have been reorganized by the Lyndon B. Johnson Library, and in most cases each volume now consists of two folders, labeled “Cables” and “Memoranda,” respectively; the original volume numbers have been retained. In most cases a “Country File” consists of one or more volumes, with separate folders for briefings on heads of state or government visiting the United States. For those countries in which a high level of diplomatic activity existed or a crisis occurred, documentation may be in separate folders.

The following geographic areas are included in University Publications of America's (UPA) Lyndon B. Johnson National Security Files series: Africa; Asia and the Pacific; Latin America; the Middle East; the U.S.S.R. and Eastern Europe; Vietnam; and Western Europe. The UN has been included as a separate NSF “Country File” by the Lyndon B. Johnson Library and is also a part of UPA's series. At the beginning of Reel 1 for each of these geographic areas and the UN, a finding aid compiled by the staff of the Lyndon B. Johnson Library has been included. These finding aids note all of the “open” material (material that has been processed and opened to researchers) and the “closed” material (material that has not been processed). UPA has microfilmed all of the “open” material. Also included at the beginning of Reel 1 for each area is a folder title list, which will assist the researcher in locating pertinent materials.

ACCESSION NUMBERS

Each document has been assigned a single accession number for reference purposes in the Bibliography and Index sections and is keyed directly to the location of the document within the companion microfilm collection.

The first element of the accession number indicates the microfilm reel number on which the document may be found, and the second element pinpoints the exact frame on the microfilm where the document begins. The frame number may be viewed on the microfilm at the bottom of the frame.

BIBLIOGRAPHY OF DOCUMENTS

Individual and Group Entries

All items in the microfilm collection are identified under the accession number assigned in the Bibliography of Documents, whether the item is a single document, or a series of documents presented as a group entry.

A group entry provides descriptors and bibliographic information common to all documents in the series, while successive entries for individual documents in the series contain bibliographic information.

Because of the nature of this collection, group entries have been prepared for most folders. Individual entries have been prepared for all nonpublicly available documents, such as cables and memoranda; publicly available documents, such as newspaper clippings, have been characterized under a group entry.

Titles

Titles appear immediately following the document accession number. Titles for main entries appear in bold type; titles for subordinate entries appear in lightface type.

Where documents contain formal titles, those titles have been entered. However, most documents in the collection do not contain formal titles and have therefore been assigned descriptive titles by UPA. These titles indicate the form of the document, its author, its recipients, and the presence, if any, of appended or closely related adjacent documents.

Bibliographic Data

Bibliographic data given for each main entry include the following items:

- Date—The date provided is the date the document was generated. Where no date was available, [n.d.] has been entered.
- Security classification—The security classification shown is the classification status of the document at the time it was generated. The absence of a security classification indicates that the document was not classified or was labeled “unclassified.”
- LBJ number—The number assigned by the Lyndon B. Johnson Library.
Descriptors
The subject and organization descriptors listed for each folder in the Bibliography of Documents serve to characterize the major topics discussed in the documents of that folder. The descriptors listings can also be used to guide the user to appropriate indexing vocabulary for finding additional materials on similar subject matter in the Index by Subjects and Names.

Descriptors are provided for all significant subjects, geographic locations, and organization names at the folder level. Personal names of authors and key figures, as well as cable and other numbers assigned by originating organizations are listed at the document level.

INDEX BY SUBJECTS AND NAMES

The Index by Subjects and Names provides access by (1) major subject matter of the documents; (2) names of geographic locations; (3) names of persons authoring or originating the documents.

Entries in this index consist of the following structural elements:
• terms;
• titles;
• date;
• accession number assigned to each indexed document and used to identify that document in the Bibliography of Documents and the microfilm collection;
• cross references (see and see also).

As documents in this collection are organized first by individual countries and within country by folders containing documents closely related by date and topic, subject index access for this collection is to the key themes at the folder level. Personal name index access for authors and significant individuals has been provided to individual documents.

Subject Terms and Cross-References
Subject terms and cross-references used in the Index by Subjects and Names are based upon an extensively cross-referenced hierarchical indexing vocabulary developed specifically to handle the National Security File materials.

When indexing an item to which a hierarchy of these terms might apply, we select the most specific applicable term or terms and usually do not also index to the broader or narrower referencing terms that, while relevant, do not reflect as well the specific topic of discussion. For example, a document focusing specifically on “Helicopters” would not also be indexed to the more general term “Military aircraft.” It is important, therefore, to pursue relevant see also references under a term, as these generally list additional documents not identified under the broader term. See references direct the user from terminology that has not been used in our controlled vocabulary thesaurus to the specific form of the subject term we have used.

Personal Names
Names of all persons who are the subject of significant discussion within the documents are included in the Index by Subjects and Names along with names of persons who author or originate documents.

Wherever possible, an indication of the position/positions held by key persons has been included in the Index, immediately following the person’s name.

Alphabetization and Sorting of References
Index terms are alphabetized on a word-by-word and letter-by-letter basis, observing spaces but ignoring punctuation. Thus, “Air transport” precedes “Airports and airfields.” Therefore, it is important to know where there are word breaks in a term.

INDEX BY DOCUMENT NUMBERS

This index lists cable and other numbers assigned to the document by the originating organization. Since many documents have more than one originating source number, only the principal reference numbers of the document have been selected for inclusion in the Index by Document Numbers.

Index entries consist of the document numbers followed by the title of the document, its date, and the accession number.

CHRONOLOGICAL LIST OF DOCUMENTS

This index lists the title of each document by the date on which the document was generated, from the earliest to the most recent. Document titles under each date are listed alphabetically, followed by the document accession number.

WITHDRAWALS

University Publications of America (UPA) has microfilmed, in this supplement, all of the declassified and/or sanitized documents from the NSF “Country Files” Asia and the Pacific geographic subdivision. These materials were made available to UPA between March 1987 and April 1996. In its microfilming, UPA has maintained the geographic breakdowns and alphabetical arrangement of individual countries designated by the staff of the Lyndon B. Johnson Library. Many individual documents and entire folders of documents remain classified or unprocessed. “Document Withdrawal Sheets” have been included in the base collections and cited in the indexes for each geographic breakdown and the United Nations. These withdrawal sheets itemize documents that have been withdrawn from the folders, due to either national security or privacy restrictions, by the staff of the Lyndon B. Johnson Library. UPA continues to collect declassified and/or sanitized documents from the NSF “Country Files” for use in future supplements.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

UPA would like to acknowledge the assistance and cooperation of the Lyndon B. Johnson Library in Austin, Texas. Christina Houston, Regina Greenwell, Linda Hanson, and staff were most helpful and patient in providing the support necessary for completion of this supplement. Their efforts are greatly appreciated.
